

Hotel Oderberger, Berlin

The Hotel Oderberger, located in the Prenzlauer Berg district of Berlin, is a listed building. It was built in Renaissance style in 1902 as a „public bathhouse“. Initially closed in 1986 due to serious damage, it has since re-opened as a historic boutique hotel with 70 rooms, two apartments and five tower suites. The hotel underwent extensive renovation work that was sympathetic to its structural background. Traces of the original baths can be found everywhere – antique tiles, anodised metal doors, windows and furniture were all re-used wherever possible – and no compromises were made when it came to comfort. Against this backdrop, CeraLine W shower channels were fitted in the bathrooms and the cover finished with matching tiles. Functional, elegant and delicate all at the same time, the channel is ideal for renovations and/or refurbishments.

Product: CeraLine W

Project: Hotel

Location: Berlin, Germany

Architecture: cpm Architekten

Year: 2016

Photography
Front: GLS Sprachzentrum
Back: Archive Dallmer, GLS Sprachzentrum